Beryn. ... The tale of Beryn ... 1867. (Card 9)

A continuation of the Canterbury tales, "obviously by a later hand"; first printed by Urry in the 1721 Chaucer, as the "Merchant's second tale", and included in several later editions; but from the first generally regarded as spurious. The tale is identical with the first part of a French prose romance: L'histoire du chevalier Bérinus. The English abstract of the original has title: The merchant and the rogue. It is a free translation from the abstract by Bricaire de la Dizmerie in Mélanges tirés d'une grande bibliothèque. Paris, t. viii, p. 225-227.
Issued in 1868 with new t.p. as Extra series, no. 5. Early English text society.

Auxiliary penitentiary female refuge society, working, as its name implies, as an auxiliary to the Penitentiary female refuge. In 1844 it was incorporated under the name of Bethesda society, thus becoming legally independent but continuing the work in connection with the other society. This relation continued until 1844, when the Penitentiary female refuge (or Bethge society, as it was known) was merged into the Bethesda society. The reports recorded in this entry cover the separate reports published by the Penitentiary female refuge, the combined reports of the refuge and the Bethesda society, and the separate reports of the Bethesda society. The Library of Congress has the following reports (no record has been found of a complete set; the society itself lacks certain years): 1843. Third annual report of the directors of the Penitentiary female refuge. (Presented December 26, 1843. With the constitution of the society, and the regulations of the institution. — Constitution Boston, 1822. (Thorndike pamphlets. vol. 40.) adopted April 12, 1819. v. 46, no. 4.
